Mr. Parions, an attorney of Cleveland, then marshal the United States Court at Washington, and been retained to represent the clams of the De Golyer contract. In the closing days of the congressional session, Parsons called grou Garfield, said that he Garfield, said that he wan competled to go to Cleveland on important private business, and asked Garfield, as a lawyer, to examine into the patents and pavemts, and prepare the argument which he ne) had undertaken to make in behalf of the De Golyer wooden-block pavement.

Parsons offered to give Garfield half his excould not do the work until congress adourned, as he was too busy, but that he would undertake it after adjournment. It ras a plain, business proposition in the line of Garfleiti's legal work outside of congress, and one that he had a perfect right to accept, shvery lawyer knows Gardeld did as he had agreed. He made a careful examination of the different b ock nts and patents, prepared a written rief and made an oral argument in favor of the De Golyer process to the Washington board. There was no concealment about the matter. He d d some careful and able legal work and was paid for it, one helf the fee, which Parsons afterward received. Gen: Garfield was supporting a family in Washington upon the meager salary of a congressman and was probably very glad of the opportuity of earning some money honcelly during his recetion. His service did not involve any tothing to do with arranging the terms of the contract; he prepared an argument; in favor of a certain kind of patent paveragnt and probably set forth the advantages of it in the best possible manner. His connection with it was merely that of a lawer, the conor let the contract or fix the price, that was done by the Washington Board of Public

It was five years site: this—n 1879—says the Tribune, before General Garfield heard anything mere of the matter. A demograti real estate investigation, and Gen. Garfield's mame was again ingged in, with an intima-tion that his services had been sucured because he was chairman of the appropriation cumittee and could influence appropriations. General Garfield appeared era time second or monittee, made a matter M-fact statement of his employment, showed the, he was no wise concerned with the price that had been paid for the payement, proved that the appropriations for the work were made by the district and not by congress, and demonstrated that the general district appropriations made by congress two years later were fixed by a conference committee of which he was not a member and in oppoon to a limitation which his own commiten had made at his instance. Gen. Garfield's matement was conclusive.

The whole case is reduced to the simply but that during a vacation of congress Gen Carfield did some legal work in the line of his profession and sarned a fee therefor. He did not even know the principals in the contract, but acted only with the agent of the parentee of the pavement. His subsequent action in congress was in direct opposition to what it would have been had he been infin enced by the fee which he earned. There was nothing wrong or improper in the transon; and he stands before the people to day a poor man in this world's goods, but with as clean a record as any public man

WAS DEMOCRACY A WAR PARTY? "Great God." exclaimed Gov. Theyer in his harangue to his andience at the ratification meeting last night, "did anybody ever dany that the war for the maintenance of the anion was right?" | If he intended his quee tion as a proposition that it had not been denied, he insulted the intelligence of every one of his hearers who had read the political bistory of this country for the past quarter of a century. Everybody knows that there were thousands of men all through the north who denied that the wur was right, and who by every means at their command, opposed every war measure. The democratic party, by its every act as a party, denied that the war was right, and every member of the was compelled to quit his party allegiance and act with the republicans.
